

Telling: Pensacola

Six Pensacola-area veterans shared their own stories of life and the military on community stages in November 2015. In dramatic presentations to Pensacola audiences, they talked about how and why they served, the injuries and challenges they've had to overcome, and how they are transitioning back into civilian life. Audience members gave them standing ovations and participated in moderated discussion with the veterans.

Watch this full length stage production of Telling: Pensacola

This program occasionally contains strong language which may be unsuitable for children.

Watch the videos below for more stories from our Telling: Pensacola cast members

This page was printed from FloridaHumanities.org.

Elliot James Smith served two years in the Army (2004-2006) including a tour in Iraq where he manned a machine gun on convoys.

Timothy Jones served two years in the Navy (1998-2000) stationed in Japan. After discharge, he spent time adjusting and, through the assistance of the VA, was able to address his mental health concerns.

Patrick McCrary served six years in the Marine Corps (1967-1973) after dropping out of high school in 1967 to fight in the Vietnam War. A Marine rifleman, he was wounded while in heavy combat in 1968.

Tabitha Nichols served eight years in the Army National Guard (2003-2011) including a tour in Iraq. She was injured in a rocket-propelled grenade attack.

Telling: Pensacola was produced in partnership with The Telling Project with support from the National Endowment for the Humanities, the Bob Woodruff Foundation, and Gulf Power.

NATIONAL ENDOWMENT
FOR THE HUMANITIES

BOB WOODRUFF
FOUNDATION

This page was printed from FloridaHumanities.org.